

The Diaspora

My dear Brothers and Sisters, we have watched our nation degenerate to the state it is today. Some of us are here watching and the others are scattered all over the world waiting for something to happen. The question we should ask ourselves is how and who would do what we are expecting?

For those of us back home, lethargy, nonchalance and insecurity are the ingredient that we have contributed to the big meal of bad governance and corruption which presently parades and permeates of our society. I am sure each one of you left the shores of our dear land for several reasons i.e. frustration, anger, search of proverbial Golden Fleece, better stakes and options among others. For whatever reason you did, ask yourself if the best have there is, or if it's been exactly as you hoped it would be.

Definitely there is a word of difference between what obtains out there and what is being thrown at us here, but aren't we all guilty? You, of running, those of us here, of keeping quite this long. we must give credit to the lone voices of the past in the human rights groups, recently the Nigeria labour congress, but we all know the cartel in government has always been able to break their ranks' because there has been never been a complementary support from the rest of us.

Right now, there is a wind of change blowing in our land, the sleeping giant is on his way back to his feet, our people already know the truth and are tired of the same set of lies and the same re-cycled leadership.

In 2004, we commenced a movement that would engender good governance, reawaken sense of belonging and reposition our nation towards the direction of greatness that god has always mapped out for it. Our people are no longer sitting in complacency, there is an unprecedented response to call to nationhood, all through the tribes and regions in our nation, there is a call for a shift from the old to the new. There is an obvious attempt by the present generation to abandon the old landmarks of tribalism, bigotry, sectionalism, suspicious and distrust that has characterized the pre and post civil war eras.

I represent this generation and in me can be found all their aspirations fearlessness, forthrightness, sincerity, empathy and good leadership. In you (Nigeria in Diaspora) I see the consignment for Nigeria's re-emergence sitting deep at sea refusing to come to berth, I see all that is required to complete the efforts back home by the gallant compatriots that have stood all these while holding to a supposed comfort zones.

You all know we must stand together at this time to see the Nigeria of our dream emerge from the doldrums of constant battering and self inflicted malady. This is why I'm counting on you to take a stand with me in the move for the liberation of our people and our land, the revolution has already begun.
